From Fr. John

I've been sitting here, looking at a blank page on my screen for a couple of hours now. Some days are like that. I understand all too well what professional writers talk about when they mention "writer's block."

After getting up and getting yet another cup of coffee, Rita (who is patiently waiting for me to write something so that she can get the announcements out) showed me a quote from Mother Teresa. It was a good quote. It was an inspiring quote. But it didn't do a lot to break through my block. Or did it?

In the sixth chapter of John's Gospel, right after Jesus feeds the five thousand with only five loaves and two fish; he tells a different group of people that he (Jesus) is the bread of life and if they eat of that bread they will never be hungry. So in one moment he's filling people's bellies and in the next he's telling them to eat spiritual food so that they'll never be hungry again. What's up with that?

Jesus, son of the Creator of all that is; Co-creator of the universe, is here for us ALL. He was there to provide for all the needs that people brought to him. He healed those who were sick. He brought sight to the blind and hearing to the deaf. He cleansed the spirits of those who were troubled. And yes, he brought food and drink to those who needed it — both physically and spiritually — in order to provide for what they needed in the moment. So on the one hand, Jesus fed those who were hungry, and on the other hand, he offered spiritual food and drink to those who hungered for that.

Are you hungry? Or thirsty? Come. Be with us. We gather around the table(s) together and eat and drink to feed our bodies. And we gather together around one table to be fed the bread of life and to drink the blood of Christ. Jesus — the amazing son of God — will be present at both meals. He knows our needs. He provides for them. Thanks be to God.

Easter blessings,

Fr. John+

This past Fall, St. James began to livestream our weekly Sunday 10:30 Eucharist and other special services. This is a great way for St. James to reach people both near and far in the digital age. Today, we have two folks who operate the camera system on alternating weeks. We are looking for two (or more!) volunteers to add to the rotation, making it a monthly commitment for all involved. No prior experience needed! Training will be provided.
